Stray Electrical Current – Stay Safe!

Electricity and water never mix — yet in marinas, docks, and waterfront areas, stray electrical current can be a hidden danger. This occurs when electrical systems on boats or docks leak current into the surrounding water, often due to faulty wiring, damaged insulation, or improper grounding.

Even a small amount of current can cause Electric Shock Drowning (ESD), where swimmers become paralyzed and unable to stay afloat. The shock may not be felt until it's too late.

Why It Matters Here

MacRay Harbor's electrical systems are inspected regularly, but stray current can also originate from individual boats plugged into shore power. That's why every boater plays a role in prevention.

Safety Tips:

NEVER SWIM IN THE MARINA — USE OUR POOL OR DESIGNATED SWIM AREAS.

INSPECT YOUR BOAT'S WIRING YEARLY WITH A CERTIFIED MARINE ELECTRICIAN.

USE PROPER SHORE POWER CORDS — NO HOUSEHOLD EXTENSIONS.

REPORT TINGLING WATER, FISH KILLS, OR CORROSION TO MEMBER SERVICES.

IF SOMEONE'S IN DISTRESS: DON'T JUMP IN — SHUT OFF POWER, THROW A FLOTATION DEVICE, AND CALL 911.
